RESEARCH

I am a population biologist whose research interests focus on three main items:

INTERESTS

1. Evolutionary demography and populations dynamics. I study the biodemographic mechanisms shaping trajectories of age-dependent mortality and reproduction. I especially examine the influence of phenotypic traits (e.g., life history traits), genetic features (e.g., sex chromosome system) and environmental variation (e.g., climate) on actuarial senescence at intra- and interspecific levels. More broadly, I also analyze how environmental factors and anthropogenic stresses influence demographic rates and the long-term viability of wild populations.
2. Dispersal and its consequences on population dynamics and genetics. I examine how social and environmental factors affect dispersal decisions. I also investigate how genetic background and plasticity determine related-trait dispersal and the architecture of dispersal syndromes. In addition, I study how dispersal patterns and syndromes shape neutral and adaptive genetic variation in spatially structured populations.
3. Population genetics/genomics and local adaptation. I examine how environmental factors and ancient demographic history influence neutral and adaptative polymorphisms among wild populations. I examine molecular signals associated with adaptation to environmental variation (e.g., temperature) using next-generation sequencing technologies. I also analyze associations between genetic (SNPs, CNVs, chromosomal rearrangements) and epigenetic (methylation) variants and life history variation in free-ranging populations.
